Instead of the Thorn by Georgette Heyer: Heyer, Georgette ...

Georgette Heyer's first contemporary novel, Instead of the Thorn was published in 1923, when she was just twenty-one years of age. This book deals with Elizabeth Arden, a naïve teenager who is married to the wealthy and erudite Stephen Ramsay, a writer of some renown, and who discovers that her strict upbringing, her youth, her rampant insecurities and dislike of sex make her unsuited to her new role as wife to a demanding and inconsiderate man.

Instead of the Thorn was Georgette Heyer's first attempt at writing a novel set in her own era. It was 1923, she was twenty years old, and as yet unmarried. Brought up by intelligent, educated parents, Georgette had been given free rein in her father's library and by adulthood was familiar – in print at least – with love in its various guises.

Instead of the Thorn was Georgette Heyer's first novel with a contemporary setting. Of course, she wrote it in 1922 or so, so that makes it a period piece for our purposes. In fact, it's a year or two before the current season of Downton Abbey is set, though the characters are middle-class and the plot is darker in some ways.
